How can you reduce your carbon footprint with your food choices

The choices we make whilst picking out food decides the future of our planet. The decisions we choose can either help or destroy our planet. It is vital everybody has to help our planet because we can all admit that we have thrown away food or bought in postal goods or bought a lot of meat. The greatest problem to our planet is us, but we can change that road on to see how you can help.

Food waste

Food waste (which is one of the biggest climate change is happening) is damaging, threatening, harming and destroying our planet. In the UK alone, there is 7.2 million tonnes of food. The question is how can we reduce this number? Food waste that we in household sites let out methane gas which is up to 87x more threatening, destructive and dangerous than carbon dioxide getting into the atmosphere but only stays about a tenth of the time. Farmers like put all their hard work into growing food, but we just so we can waste it by putting it in the bin.

Imported goods

Eating food locally has more benefits than imported goods, yet people still buy imported goods which damage the earth. This shouldn't include you either. This text is for good reason. Imported goods, if we decided to eat seasonal foods over imported goods, if we can make the right choice, then we can change the world for the better. If we don't eat seasonally, if we choose for food to be transported across countries, if we keep putting ourselves over our climate, then together we will destroy the future of our planet.

Meat consumption

Here's what you need to know about playing a part in the climate crisis by reducing your meat consumption. Change your habit of buying meat and you will be changing your carbon footprint for the better. A 2020 report found out that the meat industry is unsustainable. You must stop eating meat to prevent the world from entering the sixth age. Due to people's choice to eat meat, methane is increasing to an extreme amount. Methane, which is produced by livestock, is pushing experts to urge the public into eating less meat. Can you reduce your meat intake in order to protect our environment?

If we don't eat seasonally, if we keep wasting food, if we keep increasing our carbon footprint, then we will not be able to live with yourself. Remember that your planet is your planet. The question is, are you just going to ignore it? Change before it's too late because if you don't, you will be changing the world for the worse. Why do we forget we can help ourselves? Why do we forget we can make a difference?

Miss Hoskin is so proud of the vocabulary and poetic devices that her Y4 English class are using. Here are some amazing excerpts of the poems they have been writing about volcanos:

A vexed monster vast and grey, leaps out of his lair to suffocate the air - Lottie Bell

It stands in the way like a Knight at the Queen's Palace - Alexander Jewell

The formidable fire burns. A crushing machine. Pressure carries up. Like a firework exploding rapidly. A fountain of fire and death - Emily Bainbridge

The monster roars ferociously with orange saliva. RUN, RUN, RUN you will want to be a survivor. The monster is intimidating and a menace. If you see it, you will perish - Vinny Savage.

The ash is a vast sea of smoke stalking his prey - Ted Jameson.
